

i.

This Kaleidoscope scheme is called don't touch that RADIATOR.

It was commissioned by Eric Reid of the Kaleidoscope Scheme Archive for his personal use, but with his permission I am releasing it to the public domain. It is entirely compatible with Mac OS8 and the Doublescroll control panel, but looks a little strange with Smartscroll. It's your call on that one...

ormal

Doublescroll/Smartsroll

It's got a "techy" feel to it, and is composed entirely of greys and silvers, with the exception of a small number of blue highlights here & there. It can be used in black and white, though it loses a lot in the translation...;-)

I recommend you use it with Kaleidoscope 1.7.2+ (especially if you work with Photoshop 4.0), but it'll coexist happily with previous versions of Kaleidoscope, back to v1.5.

don't touch that RADIATOR exists both in Lite and Heavy versions, without or with a full set of system icons. I have also enclosed a couple of optional patterns for your desktop, which simulate a charcoal grey dimpled rubber mat, and which complement the scheme quite well.

y personal preference as far as system fonts go is for the classic Espi Sans Bold 10, coupled with the ubiquitous Geneva 9, but don't touch that RADIATOR will look good with most fonts.

I hope you like it. Whatever your opinion, please send me an e-mail telling me what you think, to:

<riczito@imagnet.fr>

or visit my webpage at:

<http://www.imagnet.fr/~riczito>

don't touch that RADIATOR is the work of Ric Zito and is entirely original (well, the name, anyway;-)

I would appreciate it if you didn't copy my resources, but if you must, please tell me so, or point me at your webpage / scheme.

Thanks for your taking time to read this.

RIC ZITO
Paris, France
October 1997