MegaCorp ... another quality product

You may find that we poke fun at ourselves, here at MegaCorp, within the game. In the world of DoomsDay 2000, MegaCorp has become a globe spanning entity with all of the power and influence of a world government. Unfortunately, with size and diversity comes complexity. Being not always up to the challenge, the monolithic MegaCorp International creates a great many products, and it creates those great many products poorly. Quality control and human factors are sacrificed to satisfy its never ending drive for market share and increased product revenues. Over time the company phrase "another quality product" became a source of derision, rather than pride. MegaJunk was heard in the streets more and more often in the years just prior to when this game's story begins. And, oh joy!, your commando character gets to experience those products first hand!!!

Unlike MegaJunk, we value your feedback, thoughts, and ideas. And if you have any difficulties with DoomsDay 2000, please get in touch with us, and we'll do our best to resolve your difficulties. Service with a smile, Citizen!

Product Restrictions

INITs that produce sounds (such as SoundMaster and SuperClock!) may sometimes interfere with DoomsDay 2000, and possibly cause the game to fail. It is recommended that they be disabled while playing.

Monochrome (1-bit), 16 color (4-bit) and 256 color (8-bit) monitors are supported, with all other color depths being mapped into one of these as appropriate.

Monitor color depth should not be changed while the game is running.

Refer to the System Requirements section for details on the supported hardware and software configurations.

The demonstration kit contains a brief subset of the DoomsDay 2000 game.

Characters created with the demonstration kit are specific to the demonstration kit, and can not be used with the regular DoomsDay 2000 game package.
