About DateDesist™

Quick Legal Info

By using DateDesist you are agreeing to all of the terms and conditions listed under Legal Information at the bottom of this document.

DateDesist™

DateDesist will temporarily change the date on your PC, launch a program, then return back to the correct date. DateDesist will defeat most expiring programs. It is usually illegal to use DateDesist to defeat shareware, and that is not its intended purpose.

Main Window

The main window in DateDesist has two selectable fields, Keyword and Description. To run a program, select one of these fields and click the Start button. To delete the currently selected program from DateDesist, click the Delete button. To add a new program to DateDesist, click New.

Command Line Arguments

DateDesist supports keywords as command line arguments. Each program that you configure in DateDesist is assigned a unique keyword. To launch a program without user intervention, use the following syntax.

DateDesist.exe Keyword

Current Updates

Version 1.0

DateDesist was designed and developed.

Version 2.0

The code was compiled to 32 bit, the background color was changed from florescent green to the standard gray, and the name was changed to DateDesist.

Version 3.0 – May 1st, 1997

DateDesist was completely rewritten. I have redesigned the interface, and made it much easier to use. There is no longer a need to modify text files, or use strange command line arguments. Command line arguments are still available.

Version 4.0.0 – May 17th, 1997

DateDesist was compiled in VB 5.0, and now requires the 5.0 runtimes. The size of the archived file should be reduced by over 1MB. The Edit button was added. I squished a bug that caused DateDesist to stop working if a filename with a comma “,” was used.

Known Problems

Install Problems

I've had multiple reports of installation problems. I believe most of these problems have been fixed with VB 5.0. If you experience these strange problems, please send me some email.
