

What should a new Amiga Tower look like? Some artful Amiga users were not impressed with Amiga Technologies' initial Amiga 4000 Tower designs and began offering their own.

Dave Matthews of McCook, Nebraska has created a different look for the Amiga platform. The black and silver is his original design. The purple Amiga is the "Asha Develder" version. Mr. Matthews created it when Asha, an Amiga artist who "hangs out in cyberspace" expressed a desire for a purple Amiga.

Now that Mr. Matthews has gone on record to show what he thinks a new Amiga should look like, how about the rest of us? I believe there are more artists per capita on the Amiga than on any other platform. Now is the time to show your stuff.

Send your best rendering in Jpeg or tiff format to:

While there are no prizes, however, we will forward the best examples to Amiga Technologies as well as display them here and on our new Web site (still under construction). Good luck and do your best. Who knows, you could design the icon of computing for the next millennium.

All entries will remain the property of the artist. PiM Publications Inc. maintains the right to exhibit the renderings in both printed and electronic form as long as the artist's name is enclosed. If Amiga Technologies shows an interest in an artist's design, the artist will deal directly with Amiga Technologies. PiM Publications wishes to see the best and most outlandish ideas expressed by our readers while attempting to maintain some sense of order. If you want your submission returned, please include a self addressed stamped envelope.
