

CES

What a difference a year makes.

This year's Summer Consumer Electronics Show (Chicago June 23-25) had a considerable change in appearance from the same event last year. While this year's event sponsored a wide assortment of electronic game machines and game platforms, very little was available from computer manufacturers themselves. Even the once standard Software Publishers Association's booth was absent from this year's event.

Which suggests that perhaps Commodore would not have been noticed for their absence from this event. Commodore bowed out from the Chicago event two years ago because the sponsors had decided to make the last day of the event open to the public. This year CES recended that option and closed the show to the geneal public.
