

PuyoPuyo by John Stiles

 : This is a Puyo. Pairs of colored Puyos constantly drop from the top of the screen. If they stack up to the top of the screen, you're toast!

 : To avoid that, you need to zap Puyos off the board. Make four or more touch, and they'll disappear. They don't have to line up—they just need to touch one another. (You can't use diagonals, though!) Puyos that touch “cling” to one another.

 : Your opponent will try to drop these troublemakers on you, so you should return the favor! Whenever you zap Puyos, these will drop on your opponent. The more you zap (and the more chain reactions you form), the more that will drop on your opponent.

 : To get rid of these guys, you need to zap Puyos placed next to them.

 : This little guy is Carbuncle. He'll watch over your game to make sure you play fair!

PuyoPuyo was a game originally developed by Sega/Compile on the Sega Mega Drive. It's one of the best Sega games out there, and if you can hunt it down, you can play it on a Sega Genesis with a small adaptor. Also, an Americanized version called “Dr. Robotnik's Mean Bean Machine” was just released by Sega of America. However, a game this good needed a Macintosh version! This version of PuyoPuyo was written and developed by me, John Stiles, and I owe special thanks to Phil Stroffolino for assistance in programming and debugging.

PuyoPuyo requires a Macintosh with 256 colors, a 68020 processor or better, and System 7.0. PuyoPuyo will refuse to run if your system doesn't meet these requirements.

PuyoPuyo will probably be an ongoing project for me, and I don't think it's over yet! So if you have any suggestions or comments, I'm more than happy to hear from you. Just e-mail me at the Internet address <JohnStiles@aol.com> or, if you have America Online, write to JohnStiles. I'll be more than happy to answer questions or try to fix any bugs you might find.

PuyoPuyo is shareware. If you try PuyoPuyo and like it, please send the shareware fee of $10 to:
