When you created one-point perspective, one vanishing point marker appeared in the Drawing Window. With two-point perspective, two markers appear. These markers show the points toward which the object appears to recede. By dragging these markers, you change the perspective applied to the object.

Remember that if you drag the marker past the point at which two of the grid box's handles meet, the grid box reverts to its original position.