

HTML (Hypertext Markup Language) is a system of tagging information. If you're familiar with using styles or tags in word processors, you'll have no problem with the concept of assigning tags to text.

An HTML document is a text file that contains special tags that explain how the text in the document is to be displayed, where graphics are placed, and where links to other documents (such as graphics files) occur.