Release note for version 1.0, release date Jan. 15, 1997

Air and Exhaust Gas Properties is an MS Windows application that calculates the properties of air/exhaust gases within a wide range of pressure and temperature. It may be used for analyzing a number of energy conversion components used in power plants and HVAC, such as gas turbines, compressors, boilers and heat exchangers. The accompanied help file "Thermodynamics online help" gives a brief description of these components.

1-Archived files

The files that should be in archive are:

2-How to install Air and Exhaust Gas Properties?

Air and Exhaust Gas Properties is a Windows program. In order to install the program:

- 1) Copy all the files mentioned above to a suitable directory
- 2) In Windows choose: File, New and then select "airpro.exe"

If you wish to test the program in diskette directly without installation, the diskette should not be write protected. Air and Exhaust Gas Properties saves the latest changes to input fields and default units and whenever you start you can begin where you finished last time.
