

Although construction costs increase with the size of the greenhouse, it may pay to think big. For example, the climate of a larger greenhouse may be easier to maintain than a small one simply because large spaces are less prone to rapid temperature changes. Starting large is also less expensive than adding sections later.