

The term "balled-and-burlapped" means the tree has been dug with a ball of soil left around the roots, then wrapped in burlap. B&B or container-grown trees usually get off to a faster start than bare-root trees because fewer roots are disturbed in transplanting. But they usually are more expensive.