

Although vegetable gardening is not difficult, some basics of good plant care will help produce better yields--no matter where you live.

Newly transplanted vegetable seedlings will need protection from the elements the first week or so they are in the garden. Strong sunshine or wind will quickly ruin those baby tomato plants you spent weeks nurturing in the kitchen window. Keep your young plants protected with one of the sun- and wind-shields shown below.