Overview:

Redesigned Compact Pickup Challenger

Chevrolet fully redesigned its compact S-10 pickup series for the 1994 model year, giving the truck all-new sheet metal and a fully revised interior. Exterior styling became significantly more aerodynamic than the previous S-truck, with a gently rounded hood, more aggressive front and rear fender flares, and a smoother cab design.

The new S-10 has increased shoulder room, thanks to a 2.2-inch greater overall width than its predecessor. More efficient design has resulted in over three inches more shoulder room than before. Power plant choices include a 2.2-liter four cylinder of 118-HP, and 4.3-liter V6s of either 165-HP or 195-HP. Chevrolet added a new "super sport" equipment package, which is available with the higher-output V6, and a new "ZR2" off-road equipment group is intended to compete with fat-tired Toyota and Ford compact pickups for the younger market.

Chevrolet has added a driver's airbag as standard equipment for model year 1995, as well as making further improvements in seating comfort.

Buyers of Chevy S-10 pickups had a median age of about 43 in 1994. Over eighty percent of S-pickup truck buyers were men.
