Overview:

Full-size Sedan for the '90s

Mercury's Grand Marquis sedan, completely redesigned for the 1992 model year, receives a front and rear facelift for model year 1995, adding a bit more Lincolnesque styling without detracting from its aerodynamic lines. The 1995 Grand Marquis will get a more upright grille and revised front and rear lighting. Interiors will benefit from some of the exclusive items formerly found only on the costlier Lincoln Town Car, such as power front seats with a memory feature, rear-seat heater ducts, heated outside rearview mirrors, and upgraded audio systems.

The Grand Marquis shares its 4.6-liter "modular" V8 with Ford's Crown Victoria, as in the Crown Vic, the engine is available in either single-exhaust, 190-HP or dual-exhaust, 210-HP form, and it is mated to a smooth, electronically-controlled four-speed automatic transmission. Available option packages include upsized wheels and tires, along with rear air suspension, and the requisite Towing Package, which allows Grand Marquis models so-equipped to haul up to 5,000 pounds.

The median age of Grand Marquis buyers during 1994 was just over 66 years; about two-thirds were over 65, and only about ten percent were under 50. Over two-thirds were male.
